grappa

Like its siblings, France's Marc and Germany's Trester-brand, grappa is a pomace brandy produced by direct distillation of the skins of pressed grapes. Yet grappa, for all its similarity to its siblings, has a wholly different character. Even its name is exclusive: only distillates produced in Italy can be marketed as 'grappa'.

Several versions exist on the origin of the word 'Grappa', it is likely to come from the low Latin 'grappulus', a bunch of grapes.

Grappa has now become 'trendy' in the UK, with many top leading restaurants now stocking a bigger range of grappas than malt whisky.
